Workers' Compensation Reform: Progress and the Path Ahead

Over the past several months, Californians for Fair Workers' Compensation has built significant momentum around the need for meaningful workers' compensation reform in California.

What began as an effort to bring greater attention to rising costs and system abuse has grown into a statewide coalition of businesses, local governments, public agencies, nonprofits and employers working toward a shared goal: a workers' compensation system that protects injured workers while remaining fair, sustainable and accountable.

And we're just getting started.

From Launch to Impact

Since launching publicly in May, we've worked to elevate this issue with key policymakers and the public, strengthen our coalition and build the foundation needed to achieve lasting reform.

Together, we have:

- Made an impact at the Capitol, including helping defeat SB 555, a proposal that would have increased costs and employer liability.
- Expanded awareness and visibility statewide through earned media, paid digital advertising, our website, newsletters and social media.
- Built a growing coalition and strengthened relationships with employers and organizations across California.

Building on This Year's Progress

As the 2026 legislative session winds down, we're already looking ahead.

The work we've done this year has yielded incredibly valuable takeaways: a clear understanding of the legislative landscape, stronger relationships, a growing coalition and important lessons about what it will take to advance meaningful reform.

Over the next several months, we'll put those lessons to work as we prepare for the 2027 legislative session. That includes continuing to grow and engage our coalition, strengthening relationships with policymakers and stakeholders, refining our policy priorities and messaging and building the research and communications needed for the next phase of the campaign.

Our coalition is committed to advancing commonsense reforms that protect California workers while ensuring employers can continue creating jobs, delivering essential services and investing in our state.

Thank you for being part of this effort. We're excited about the momentum we've created together — and the opportunity ahead to turn that momentum into lasting reform.
